In December 1982, the last built transcontinental railroad ceased to exist when the Western Pacific Railroad was approved for merger into the massive Union Pacific Railroad system, itself part of the original transcontinental railroad.

Always a frugal and innovative operation, the WP pioneered important industry advances still in use today, including diesel power, turbocharging, centralized traffic control, roller bearing-equipped freight cars, computerization and the use of concrete ties, just to name a few.

In 1983, the Feather River Rail Society was formed with the goal of preserving the legacy of the Western Pacific. The Union Pacific graciously donated several pieces of equipment and granted use of the former WP locomotive facility in the City of Portola. This 37-acre site includes a 16,000 square foot diesel shop in active use from 1954 until 1974 as well as 2-1/2 miles of track.

This facility became home to what is now known as the Western Pacific Railroad Museum at Portola. By the late 1990s, the FRRS had assembled what is considered by many to be one of the premier collections of equipment and archival material focusing on a single railroad family.

Today, this collection includes over 36 locomotives and 120 pieces of rolling stock, as well as an extensive gathering of corporate records, paperwork, artifacts and historic photos and films. Visitors to the Western Pacific Railroad Museum soon discover that this is a hands-on facility where they are encouraged to climb into the cabs of locomotives, sit in the engineer's seats, and browse through the rolling stock on display. The working diesel shop features an exhibit room and a variety of other railroad-related displays are located throughout the building.

Many unique and important items of railroad history are preserved in the Museum's collection including the first diesel locomotive purchased by the railroad, the last operating locomotive built to pull the California Zephyr passenger train, one of only five remaining WP steam engines, a 200-ton rail mounted crane, a passenger car once used for blood donation service during wartime and a majority of the WP's 80 years of surviving corporate records.

The FRRS is a not-for-profit, 501(c)3 volunteer organization that does not receive any government funding. Although the FRRS enjoys a good working relationship with the Union Pacific Railroad, it is also not affiliated with the UP. The continued existence of this museum and archives depends upon revenue gathered from memberships, donations, fundraising, admissions and store sales. Please help support our mission to preserve and protect the legacy of the Western Pacific and its people.

Portola offers many accommodations and services for travelers and is the only incorporated city in Plumas County. Located at an elevation of 4,856 feet in the Sierra Nevada Mountains, Portola is 150 miles northeast of Sacramento and 50 miles northwest of Reno. For additional information on Portola and surrounding communities, please contact Eastern Plumas Chamber of Commerce at 530.836.6811 or visit their website at www.easternplumaschamber.com.
